PROUDLY HANDCRAFTING MACINTOSH SOFTWARE SINCE 2001

WHAT REVIEWERS ARE SAYING ABOUT SANDVOX®

Published reviews help spread the word about Sandvox and often provide helpful side-by-side comparisons: helpful to us, and helpful to potential customers who don't want to spend time and money evaluating more than one application. Here is a sampling of what reviewers have said about Sandvox:

"Sandvox Still Outperforms iWeb"

by Erik Vlietinck for the IT Enquirer (Dec 12, 2007)

http://www.it-enquirer.com/main/ite/more/iweb\_vs\_sandvox

Sandvox 1.2.5 integrates with a large number of must-haves for today's web designer, such as a commenting engine, Google AdSense and Google Analytics and much more. The difference with other design-first web creation applications, however, is that it uses third-party services such as HaloScan. This way, Sandvox enables the web technology challenged to build interactive web sites that look good.

Sandvox 1.2.5 is an application that has everything in its package bundle an amateur designer needs to get him started quickly: there are templates from which to choose, integration with iPhoto and other Mac OS X utilities, and easy to use snippets –called Pagelets– that you can use to quickly add features to a web page. Contrary to Apple's iWeb, Sandvox really can help you create a full-scale, full-functioning, Web 2.0 web site fast. . . .

Review: Sandvox - Website Creation Tool for Mac OS X

by jcost for thinkmac.net (July 10, 2006)

<http://www.thinkmac.net/blog/archives/review-sandvox-website-creation-tool-for-mac-os-x.html/>

Sandvox is a tool for creating a complete, professional-looking website without needing to ever have to look at HTML code. Karelia software has done a nice job in making the experience of creating a website both easy and fun for people of all skill levels.

Let's face it, not all of us have time to learn HTML and CSS to produce the kind of beautiful web pages Sandvox allows us to make. Even for those that know HTML, they may find Sandvox more convenient than hand coding.

. . . Sandvox has the quality that should be expected of all Macintosh applications. Sandvox is the type of third party application I would bring up that distinguishes the Macintosh developer community from the Windows one. It's all about the experience of the user, not features and sales.

With Sandvox, you don't need to have any background in web development to make gorgeous web pages. If you can navigate the web and you know how to type into text boxes, you can create almost anything you can conjure up from your head. This is really where Sandvox pulls ahead of iWeb and really distinguishes itself. . . .

MacNN Review: Sandvox

by Rick Curran and Ilene Hoffman (Nov 9, 2007)

<http://www.macnn.com/reviews/sandvox.html>

Sandvox is an exciting web page creation software with plenty of features, designed to help you create a site with no previous experience. It is easy to make a web page or five, a blog, or photo and movie pages. You can create a group of pages for your home business, Cub Scout Den, soccer team, or church group, without knowing any HTML, CSS, or server stuff. Just drag and drop text and photos into a page. . . .

Sandvox 1.2.2 Offers iPhone Support

by Dave Caolo for The Unofficial Apple Weblog (July 17, 2007)

<http://www.tuaw.com/2007/07/17/sandvox-1-2-2-offers-iphone-support/>

Fresh from receiving an Apple Design Award at WWDC '07 (runner up for "Best Mac OS X User Experience"), the folks at Karelia have released Sandvox 1.2.2. . . . If you're unfamiliar, it's a WYSIWYG web editor that features drag-and-drop ease, iLife integration, simple publishing and several attractive templates.

Speaking of templates, they've all been tweaked in version 1.2.2 to look great on an iPhone.

Sandvox Revisited: 5 Stars

Macs Are Great! (Oct 23, 2006)

<http://macsaregreat.com/?p=37>

A while back we bought a copy of Sandvox, a WYSIWYG web editor for OS X. It's just absolutely fantastic as a layout tool, the designs included with it really pop, as George Carlin might say, and it lets me crank out a website that will work perfectly on any website anywhere in absolute minimum time. I really like Sandvox.

. . . Sandvox is an absolute pleasure to use. I highly recommend it to those wanting to make a small to medium sized website of their own.

. . . Sandvox makes designing a web site fun, and fun is a good thing.

Software Gift Ideas

by the TidBITS staff (Dec 7, 2006)

<http://db.tidbits.com/article/8774>

If you know someone who'd like to design a simple Web site, give them the gift of getting started on the right foot. If you'll be providing tech support, the best option is probably the software you are most familiar with, but if you aren't sure which way to go, Allen Watson recommends the $50 Sandvox from Karelia. He enthused, "If you know anyone who wants to set up a blog, family photo album, or simple-to-moderate Web site, but who does not know HTML or CSS, I recommend Sandvox. Sandvox is template-based, with nice templates, and it produces standards-compliant HTML and CSS. . . ."
